In An Instant

DISCLAIMER: I don't own any of the characters from ER. They are the property of Warner Brothers, and a few others, I don't know who exactly. I do own a few people who will appear later, but they will be mentioned specifically in the parts they appear in.

NOTE: I wrote this in two minutes after I watched tonight's (2/10/2000) episode, 'Be Still My Heart'. This is my interpratation fo what will happen. I'm probably really far off, but, who cares? I write for fun. The R rating is to be safe. It might get that violent at some point. I don't know.

Dr. John Carter watched as Medical Student Lucy Knight took a deep breath and passed out. He tried to get up, but his body wouldn't allow it. He tried to call out, to say her name, but he couldn't. Finally Carter succumed to his injuries, and his world went black.

Dr. Kerry Weaver walked into the room, looking for Carter. She had been told the young doctor had come into the room to speak with Lucy Knight, but he had not returned. Weaver stopped cold in her tracks as she saw the bloody body of Carter laying on the floor. She let out a blood-curdling scream.

Heads snapped up at the Administration desk as they heard the scream. Several members fo the medical staff exchanged glances as they ran towards the sound. Dr. Mark Greene reached the door first and stopped as he saw the cause of the scram. He pushed past Weaver, who was frozen in shock, and crouched by Carter's side.

"John?! He asked as he felt for a pulse.

Carter let out a groan. "Lucy, help Lucy," he mumbled through his pain, Lucy his only concern.

Mark looked in the direction of Carter's gaze and felt his blood go cold. Lucy was on the floor on the other side of the bed, unconscious, bleeding horrendously. "Get two trauma kits in here!" Mark called as he pointed to Lucy. "Lucy Knight's over there!"

Carter heard the voice call his name and made himself wake up. He had to make sure they helped Lucy. He had to. He tried to tell them, but he didn't know if they'd heard the message until he saw someone crouch down next to Lucy. Carter let out a sigh of relief and passed out, the pain overcoming him again.

That's it for now. I know, short. More will come soon. I promise!
